01.03.2022 · Repression is considered the basis of all other defense mechanisms because it fundamentally affects conscious awareness. If an uncomfortable thought, memory, or emotion is repressed, the conscious mind is not aware of it and therefore does not need to, or have the opportunity to, employ any other defense mechanisms.

Defence mechanism - Wikipedia
Defense mechanisms develop during childhood and continue throughout adulthood, so they are very ingrained and can be difficult to change. Learning new, more adaptive defense mechanisms takes time and effort. Sublimation is always considered an adaptive defense mechanism. There is no maladaptive form of sublimation.
