Though Merleau-Ponty does not mention the Meno paradox directly, his work in the expansive, multi-part introduction to The Phenomenology of Perception, can be seen as developing a directly analogous issue, as well as diagnosing its source. The introduction offers an expansive critique of rationalist (or 'intellectualist') and empiricist approaches to perception. Here I trace that critique

We meet this position – as the same one – both in Wittgenstein and Merleau-Ponty. Philip DWYER sees it as particularly significant in his book : Seme and Subjectivity, A Study of Wittgenstein and Merleau-Ponty, Leiden, New York, E.J. Brill, 1990. In the case of Wittgenstein, that what is expressed cannot be dissociated from expression can be conceived in two ways.

I use Merleau -Ponty's "paradox of expression" as a way of considering Brecht's call for the co-presence of the actor and their character in a stage performance. I borrow Nick Crossley's approach to phenomenological intersubjectivity and consider the apparent theoretical implications in the performance of the 'not...but' procedure. I argue that in order for the actor to succe
